

Homeroom Curriculum

Class	MYP 1	MYP 2	MYP 3	MYP 4	MYP 5
Organisation and Study Skills	Communities rely on individuals taking responsibility	Human systems need balance to sustain a sense of well-being	Creating goals and employing a variety of study strategies can promote an organized and healthy lifestyle.	Developing academic organizational systems are essential in helping students achieve their academic goals, as well as help to develop a student's personal efficacy and agency.	How to successfully pass formal assessments, tests and exams.
Service and Action	Our AIS community relies on people working together to provide the structure and processes the school needs in order to function effectively. We can and should take action to benefit our school community.	When people feel that they have been unfairly treated, relationships often degenerate into conflict	Taking into account other people's perspectives can help build sustainable relationships in a group.	Students can interact with mankind globally and create opportunities to help others in around the world through planning, service, and reflection.	Preparation for completing personal project.
Social and Emotional Learning	As we grow we change socially, emotionally and physically. Our identity and relationships with others develop and adapt.	Our identity and how we express it is a product of our choices and the culture we experience	Relationships can be shaped and changed by different personalities and boundaries.	Positive socio-emotional skills are critical in helping young people to develop their own identity, stay physically and mentally healthy, and create positive relationships with others.	Preparation for the next chapter in student's life
International Mindedness	I am responsible for the world that I share with others.	Perspectives originate from our own identity, which is formed, in part, by the cultures we experience	Internationally-minded people demonstrate intercultural understanding	Civic engagement, including voting, protesting, volunteering, and running for public office, is essential for citizens to contribute positively to their country and the global community at large.	Students research into investigating when NEWS/INFORMATION/STASTISTICS on the internet are accurate or inaccurate.
